

---

---

---

---

---

alone. Rebecca sees him, and upon learning who he is, veils herself. Eliezer tells Isaac all about the events of meeting Rebecca, her caring for him and his camels, his meeting with her family, and her willingness to join him to meet and marry Isaac. Immediately after hearing Eliezer's story, Isaac marries Rebecca: "Isaac then brought her into the tent of his mother Sarah, and he took Rebecca as his wife. Isaac loved her, and found comfort after his mother's death" (Genesis 24:67).

In Breishit Rabbah, there is a Midrash about this tent, which may give a clue to how Isaac agrees to this arrangement so quickly:

"All of the days that Sarah was living, there was a cloud [of God's presence] attached to the entrance of her tent. When she died, the cloud was no more. When Rebecca came, the cloud returned.

All the of the days that Sarah was living, the doors were open wide. When she died, they were no longer wide. When Rebecca came, the wideness returned.

All the days of that Sarah was living, there was a blessing in her dough. When she died, the blessing went away. When Rebecca came, the blessing returned.

All the days that Sarah was living, a light burned from one Shabbat evening to the next. When Sarah died, the light was extinguished. When Rebecca came, the light returned.

As soon as [Isaac] saw [Rebecca], that she did the deeds of his mother, he brought her into the tent."

Up to this verse, we had no real indication of how much Isaac was still hurting from his mother's death. For three years, he has not found comfort, has been alone, and has not been able to take down her tent. For three years, he has longed for the cloud that showed love and happiness and God's presence, for the open doors, for the welcome smell of constantly baking bread, for the bright light, ever-present light. For three years, he has been dwelling in his past, trapped in his grief, missing from his own story.

Note that these miraculous occurrences surrounding Sarah's tent don't seem to reappear just because Rebecca lives—they reappear when Rebecca comes to the tent—which happens when Isaac sees her, hears of her generosity and openness, brings her in, and begins to see the possibility of a future again. He heard about her generosity, her willingness to come and be a part of a people who always keeps its doors open to the stranger. He sees the values he cherished in his mother still alive in another person, still existing in God's world.

We learn much about mourning from this week's portion. From Abraham, we learn to offer eulogies to honor our loved ones. At the end of the Parasha, when Abraham dies, we learn from Isaac and Ishmael to set aside any differences while we honor the person we have lost. In that same moment, we learn from God to be present with a mourner when they bury their dead.

From Rebecca, we learn how to help them once Shiva has ended, once it is time to reengage with our lives. For many of us, the hardest part of grief is finding a way back into our lives, to find a way to not disappear into our grief. Grief and depression can feel like we have stopped living our stories, as we are so consumed by what is missing that we cannot see what is. However, when Rebecca arrived, Isaac remembered what it was to see generosity in the world. He sees tPn en thÂ

G\ UfY'h ]g'Ya U]`.

Got this as a forward? Click here to receive our future emails.

View this email in your inbox.

15600 Mulholland Dr.
Bel Air, CA | 90077 US

This email was sent to michelle.starkman@aju.edu.
To continue receiving our emails, add us to your address book.